Property Type: Vacant Land

Appeal Summary: The subject parcel is a .43-acre vacant lot, adjacent to the Petitioner's residentially improved parcel. Petitioner is appealing the classification assigned to the Subject property for Tax Year 2022 of Vacant Land. Petitioner is requesting the subject property be reclassified as Residential. Petitioner states on their appeal form that the subject parcel meets the statutory definition of Residential Land as containing an essential improvement to the adjacent residential lot.

The Petitioner's appeal at the assessor-level was denied. The Subject property was physically inspected by the Assessor and County Appraiser on June 8th, 2022 in response to the filed protest. The owner (petitioner) was present for this site inspection.

Discussion: During the 2021 Colorado Legislative session, House Bill 21-1061 was introduced and subsequently signed into law by Governor Polis in April of 2021. The change in law taking affect for the next property assessment date of January 1st, 2022. HB21-1061 changed the statutory definition of Residential Land for the purposes of property tax classification, as found in §39-1-102(14.4)(a)(I). The focus of the changes made to the definition involved parcels of land without a residential dwelling. The signed bill is made part of this report as Exhibit A. Similar to the old definition, there are three criteria that need to be met for an otherwise vacant parcel to qualify for a residential classification; those three criteria are summarized below:

- a) Contiguous - the boundary line of the subject vacant parcel is physically touching the improved residential parcel's boundary line. However, contiguity is not interrupted by an intervening local street, alley, or common element in a common-interest community.

- b) Common Ownership – Identical ownership based on the record of title, between the vacant parcel (subject) and improved parcel containing a residence.

- c) Use - The parcel without a residence contains a related improvement that is essential to the use of the residential improvement next door. “Related Improvement” is further defined within the statute to mean a driveway, parking space, or improvement other than a building, or that portion of a building designed for use predominantly as a place of residency.

The biggest change in this statutory definition from the prior version is the criteria of Use, or how the vacant parcel is used in connection with the house parcel. Removed from the statute was the phrase “...used as a unit in conjunction with the [adjacent] residential improvement...” Replaced by item ‘C’ above “a related improvement that is essential” to the adjacent residence. The key word added is the term “essential”. This was deliberate as the former phrase for how the parcel is used was very broad in meaning and the supreme court rulings rejected the Property Tax Administrator’s direction to the assessors in the A.R.L. using the terms ‘integral’ and ‘likely to convey together’ as part of the criteria as terms that were simply not a part of the statutory language. Therefore, the word ‘essential’ was purposely chosen to establish an unmistakable high degree of necessity to the use criteria of the related improvement; a use that is active rather than passive in its character or nature. The legislative intent of the “related improvement” language chosen was to be somewhat specific while putting some teeth to the use criteria of a non-dwelling parcel in relation back to the house parcel.

Judgement of the Criteria

Two of the three criteria found in the statutory definition for an otherwise vacant parcel receiving the Residential classification requires a subjective judgement on the part of the assessor’s office. The ownership criteria is very much a factual determination and is based on the assessment date - as of January 1st is the ownership of record identical – with variations allowed by statute for middle initials, and full names vs. shorten names. The Subject is not in dispute on meeting the ownership requirement. The second criteria of contiguous in the case of the subject parcel and the adjacent house parcel is also straight forward as the two parcels touch along a common boundary line, so the criteria of Continuity is clear and conclusive.

This leaves the third criteria of a related improvement essential to the house parcel – this criteria is always a judgment call for the assessor’s office; this has not changed from the prior definition and the new definition. It is something highly subjective, and should only be determined on a case-by-case basis. The policy or standard established by the Routt County Assessor as it pertains to the vacant-contiguous parcels for the third criteria of a related improvement essential to the adjoining residence is this:

Does the related improvement solve (or mitigate) an inadequacy or dysfunction of the house parcel? A house without secured access is a dysfunction, and thus the need to control the parcel with the driveway is considered essential is one example. A house or condo without adequate parking available is another; if the only room for a garage or parking is across the alley on another lot, owning and using that second parcel in that capacity solves a dysfunction of the house parcel and therefore would be considered ‘essential’. A house without adequate yard space, and the vacant parcel next door is developed into a functioning landscape to serve as the home’s primary yard space can be looked at as solving an inadequacy of the house parcel and its lack of an appropriate yard area.

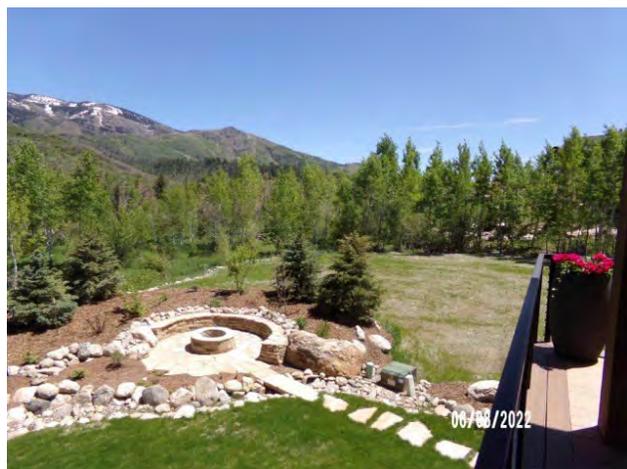

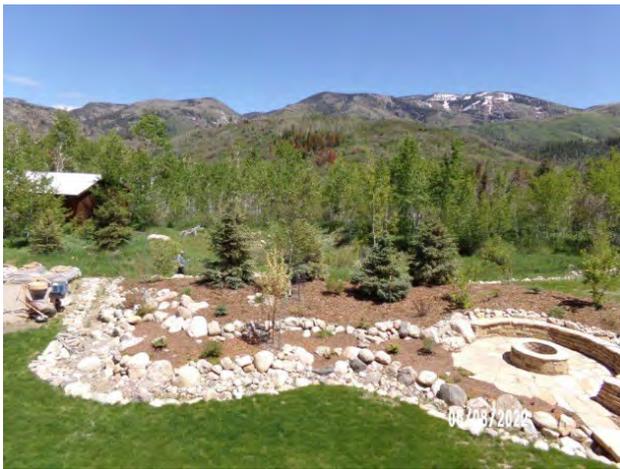

The judgment is against the property, not the owner. Example: a house with a 3-car garage is certainly providing adequate parking to a single-family residence. However, a particular owner with a large RV, a ski boat and fishing dory may find this 3-car garage house and its driveway inadequate for his need or desire to house his recreational toys and feel the need to have a secondary garage on a second lot, and consider that essential to him owning a residence. The focus of these judgements is on the real estate, not the owner. Thus the question in these cases to be answered is: Does the related improvement solve (or mitigate) an inadequacy or dysfunction of the house parcel (real estate)? The standard given by the statutory language is 'essential'. The simple dictionary meaning of that word is absolutely necessary; indispensable. The R.C. Assessor's Office does not focus on the term of absolutely, but does very much look at these cases and the improvements under the terms of "necessary or indispensable" back to the use of the residential property.

Subject Property's Applicability to the Res Land Definition

The Subject property is held in common ownership with the Petitioner's residential improved parcel next door as of the January 1st, 2022 assessment date and the two parcels physically touch. Therefore, the Subject meets the first two criterion of continuity and identical ownership found in the statutory definition.

As to a related improvement located on the Subject property, the assessor's office, in its inspection of the Subject found the following: The parcel has some considerable landscaping improvements located on it, including a manicured lawn extending from the adjacent house parcel –with in-ground sprinklers, there is a hardscape of flagstone and boulders creating a fire pit and a raised planter bed of considerable size. These improvements tend to end at the southern property line of the house parcel and so the remaining 2/3s of the subject lot - while graded flat - appears to be left alone for the natural vegetation to return. Several site photos are provided in the following pages of this report to illustrate the relationship between the Subject's improvements and that of the adjacent house parcel and its landscaping.

The house parcel contains a large 7,000sf house plus an oversized 3-car garage. There is significant hardscape landscaping on the south side of the house, and somewhat limited yard space to the east in the direction of the Subject. The north side of the house would be considered typical in its yard and landscaping, this is also the side with the driveway. The western portion of the house parcel is fairly steep coming off of the local street with a small section of developed landscaping up against the house (1st picture).

The house sits on 0.41 acres and the house does appear to encompass much of the lot, with the eastern end of the house built very close to the boundary line with the subject parcel – this is where the lawn extends from the house parcel to the Subject vacant lot. Being this is a newly constructed house, multiple aerials are shown of the Subject and adjacent house parcel on the next two pages.

Appraiser's Conclusion & Recommendation:

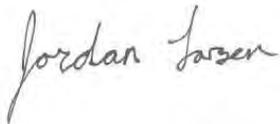

The question of judgement in this appeal case is does the Subject parcel solve an inadequacy of the house parcel – or a dysfunction? The Subject's landscaping improvements certainly connect back to the house nicely, but can a lawn extension and a hardscape fire pit area be considered essential? At the site visit in June, the property lines were walked and lengthy consideration was given to this Petitioner's appeal. At the end of the site visit, it was very much undecided if approval of a residential classification was warranted. After visiting many other appeals and looking at how other cases were being decided or ruled on, it was determined that it would be inconsistent with our office policy on these vacant-contiguous properties to reclassify this subject property back to Residential.

The house is large and seems to dominate the 0.41ac parcel thus leaving a smaller than expected yard for the size of the house. It does have a large yard in terms of total sq. footage; but again, in relation to the somewhat gigantic feel of the house to the lot, it can give the impression that the yard space of the house is too small for the house's size. A similar remark made by the owner at the end of the site visit was made to which the Assessor agreed. Petitioner's submittal packet to the CBOE includes an analysis of this situation of house size to lot size. This will be addressed in the assessor's testimony rather than in this report.

However, with all that said, the question to be judged is: are the related improvement(s) of the Subject parcel essential back to the house parcel? The Assessor and County Appraiser's conclusion is while the Subject parcel greatly enhances the yard space of the house parcel, provides a very nice fire pit, and creates an effective buffer zone for the house, the Subject's improvements are not solving or mitigating a dysfunction of the house parcel, these improvements located on the vacant subject lot, while certainly adding comfort and enjoyment to the house parcel, is not considered essential, but rather a well-appointed luxury to the owner of the house parcel.

The Assessor's Office recommendation is to deny the petitioner's appeal to reclassify the subject to Residential, while maintaining the current classification of Vacant Land.
